THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

CHAPTER I
THE EARLY PERIOD

The first part of the history of the United States is the story of the early period, from the first discovery of the continent to the establishment of the first colonies.

The first discovery of the continent was made by Christopher Columbus in 1492. He was sailing for Spain when he reached the island of San Salvador in the West Indies.

After his discovery, Columbus returned to Spain and reported his findings to the king and queen.

The king and queen were interested in his discovery and gave him permission to explore further. Columbus set out on his second voyage in 1493, and he discovered the island of Hispaniola.

He then sailed to the mainland of North America, where he discovered the Gulf of Mexico and the Florida peninsula.

After his second voyage, Columbus returned to Spain and reported his findings to the king and queen.

The king and queen were interested in his discovery and gave him permission to explore further.

Columbus set out on his third voyage in 1498, and he discovered the island of Trinidad and the northern coast of South America.

After his third voyage, Columbus returned to Spain and reported his findings to the king and queen.

The king and queen were interested in his discovery and gave him permission to explore further.

Columbus set out on his fourth voyage in 1502, and he discovered the northern coast of Central America.

After his fourth voyage, Columbus returned to Spain and reported his findings to the king and queen.
